

Convers[t]ation

breaking the silence.

Sexual harassment

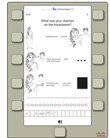

Street sexual harassment is embarrassing, humiliating and undermines a woman's freedom. Endorsed by patriarchal societal attitudes, street sexual harassment is a particularly persistent form of violence against women; many women accept street sexual harassment as a 'normal' part of their daily lives.

- Gender violence in India, 2010, Report by Prajnya, an Indian non-governmental organization

Under-reporting of sexual harassment is a major obstacle in addressing the problem, rendering the issue invisible. Our initiative, Convers[t]ation is an electronic panel where women can report their case. These reports in turn will help spark conversations.

Reporting

Women can quickly and anonymously report their case. To suit India's multicultural, literate and illiterate audience, the panel supports multiple languages and contains both text and semi-abstracted images, supported by an audio layer.

Convers[t]ation

summary reports to institutions

visualisation on a big public screen

Feedback

The data will flow into a repository, transparent to all. From here, institutions and the general audience will receive feedback, via reports and visualizations on a public screen.

It is a small step, but by making the problem visible and breaking the silence around sexual harassment, a change could be made possible.